THIS REPORT AND YOUR LAWYER

Research into published rulings: not legal advice, and not a replacement for a lawyer or mediator.

- This report does not replace a lawyer. A divorce petition to the court requires a lawyer.
- It is wise to take this report to a lawyer before you sign anything or let a deadline pass.
- You can instruct a lawyer or use a legal remedy at any moment; nothing in this report advises against it.

This report describes your situation as you told it. The other party was not heard. The report makes no findings about them.

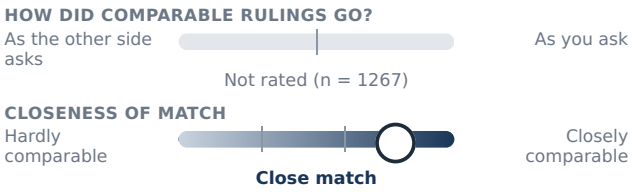

What you get	A written research report on published Dutch rulings comparable to your situation, answering your 4 questions.
What it is not	Not legal advice, not a prediction or guarantee, not a replacement for a lawyer or mediator.

One chapter per question. Each starts with three scales, shows the rulings we read and which way each went, how those add up, and what these cases teach.

HOW TO READ THE RATINGS

Every score is a sliding scale. The dot shows where the rulings we read come out; no dot means the score does not apply here. A scale is a count of published rulings, not a chance.

How did comparable rulings go?
Of the comparable rulings counted (n), how many (k) went as you ask: the further right the dot, the more went your way. A count, not a probability or a prediction. Child and partner support amounts are not rated: they depend on too many variables.

Closeness of match
How closely the rulings behind the reading resemble your case on average (children, ages, marriage, procedure, incomes).

IMPORTANT: THIS IS RESEARCH, NOT LEGAL ADVICE

This report summarizes published decisions, gives our reading of them and offers practical suggestions. It does not predict the outcome in your case, promises no result, and does not replace your lawyer. It is wise to discuss every step with your lawyer before you file or agree to anything.

QUESTION 1 OF 4

Where will the children mainly live?

YOUR POSITION (AS YOU STATED IT)

Main residence with you, about 70% of the time with you.

OTHER SIDE'S POSITION (AS YOU DESCRIBED IT)

Main residence alternating between both, about 50% of the time with you.

HOW TO KEEP YOUR POSITION STRONG

- It can help to keep doing what supports your position: a stable routine, a dated care log and factual communication.
- It can help to keep messages with the other parent short and about the children; your own conduct can be raised against you.
- It can help to prepare answers to the other side's arguments (chapter 3) before the hearing.

General preparation tips, to discuss with your lawyer. They are not drawn from the rulings.

QUESTION 2 OF 4

What happens to the house?

YOUR POSITION (AS YOU STATED IT)

You keep the home, within 12 months.

OTHER SIDE'S POSITION (AS YOU DESCRIBED IT)

The home is sold, within 6 months.

HOW TO IMPROVE YOUR POSITION

- It can help to show that you can finance a takeover on your own: an indicative mortgage offer or a statement from your bank.
- An independent valuation can help, so the price is not the dispute.
- It can help to propose concrete terms: a deadline, who pays the costs until the transfer, and a sale as fallback if financing fails.
- It can help to read the rulings that went the other way (listed below) with your lawyer: was financing, the price or the deadline the issue?

General preparation tips, to discuss with your lawyer. They are not drawn from the rulings.

What these cases teach

HOW TO PREPARE

- It can help to gather recent pay slips and annual statements of yourself, and what you know of the other side's income.
- If the other side does not work, or works less than they could, it can help to collect what shows their earning capacity: education, work history, vacancies.
- It can help to document the care split: it changes the care discount (zorgkorting).
- You can ask your lawyer for a draft calculation of ability to pay (draagkracht) and need (behoefte) before the hearing.

General preparation tips, to discuss with your lawyer. They are not drawn from the rulings.

What these cases teach

HOW TO PREPARE

- It can help to document the facts of the marriage: its duration, who cared for the children, career breaks.
- It can help to document the need: the standard of living during the marriage and your current costs.
- If earning capacity is an issue, it can help to gather education, work history and job applications.
- Partner support law changed on 1 January 2020; check with your lawyer which rules apply to you.

General preparation tips, to discuss with your lawyer. They are not drawn from the rulings.

BEFORE YOUR HEARING

From analysis to dossier, before the next decision point.

ITEM	YOUR INTAKE	NOW	BEFORE INTERIM STAGE	BEFORE FINAL STAGE
☐ Income documents	held	It can help to gather recent pay slips and tax returns of yourself, and any figures you hold for the other side.	It helps if the set is complete and ordered by period.	It can help to update this with the latest period before the hearing.
☐ Property records	missing	It can help to collect the deed, mortgage statement and any valuation.	Decide whether a valuation is needed.	It can be useful to have a current valuation and mortgage balance at hand.
☐ Care log	missing	Start a dated log of who cared for the children and when.	It helps to keep it consistent and factual.	Summarize it for counsel.
☐ Calendar / availability	to do	It can help to write down your work pattern and back-up care.	It helps if it matches the care log.	It can help to update this with every change.
☐ Written communications	held	It can help to keep messages about the children and money in writing.	Select the relevant exchanges by date.	You can give your lawyer a dated selection.
☐ Third-party evidence	missing	It can help to think about who can confirm the care you provide.	You can ask for short written statements.	It helps to keep them current.
☐ Professional reports	missing	It can help to note which professionals are involved.	You can ask your lawyer whether a report is useful.	It helps if any report is available in time.
☐ Drafted requests	missing	It can help to write down your requests per dispute point.	You can check them with your lawyer.	You can finalize them with your lawyer.
☐ Questions for counsel	to do	It can help to collect your questions (see chapter 9).	It can help to prioritize them.	Re-check them against new evidence.

1. Everything important in writing.
2. No claim without supporting evidence.
3. It helps to distinguish interim from final procedure.
4. It helps to turn logistics into a predictable plan.
5. It helps to track actual behavior, not just intentions.
6. It helps to keep communication factual and focused on the child and the issue.
7. It helps to show the other party's legitimate interests fairly.
8. Lead with your own strengths and evidence.
9. It is wise to accept a weaker outcome only once you understand its effect.
10. It helps to answer each material point with evidence.

QUESTIONS FOR COUNSEL

1. What assumptions in this analysis should be verified?
2. Which evidence is still missing?
3. Which requests need to be made now rather than later?
4. Which comparable decisions are most relevant, and why?
5. What facts could materially change the conclusion?
6. Which parts should not be relied upon without legal review?

Deadlines: the general rules

This report calculates no end dates. It gives only the general rule; have a lawyer set the end date for your case.

- Appeal against a decision of the district court: within three months of the day of the decision (article 358 Rv). After that, appeal is no longer possible.
- There is no appeal against a decision on provisional measures (article 824 Rv); discuss with your lawyer what is possible.
- A divorce decision must be registered in the civil registry within six months after it became final; otherwise it lapses (article 1:163 BW).
- Payments that fall due periodically, such as alimony, can expire per instalment after five years.
- Pension division and set-off under a prenuptial agreement can have their own deadlines. It is wise to have your lawyer or a pension expert check which apply to you.

Pension

Pension did not come up in your intake. If it does play a role, look at these points.

- It is wise to notify every pension fund of the divorce within two years after the divorce, with the fund's form, and to check whether and how the pension is divided.
- If a covenant or prenuptial agreement says something about pension (for example conversion or waiving equalisation), read the deadlines in those documents themselves.

- Extra care is wise with a pension in own management (with an own company), a foreign pension, a value transfer, pre-pension or a waiver of equalisation.
- Payments of a paid-out pension share can expire per instalment after five years.

Tax: points to have checked

This report gives no tax advice and makes no calculations or net amounts. It is wise to have a tax adviser check these points before you sign. Marked: what came up in your intake.

☒ The end of the tax partnership

☐ Tax and health-insurance contribution on partner alimony, for the payer and the receiver

☐ A latent tax claim on shares, and a current account with an own company

☒ Gift tax on an unequal division

☒ Transfer tax when taking over the home (an exemption sometimes applies)

☒ Box 3: assets, savings and investments after the division

☐ A pension in own management

BEFORE YOU SIGN A COVENANT

- Has everything been valued, and by whom? For the home or a business: an independent appraiser, ideally chosen together. This report values nothing and calculates no alimony or pension.
- Is the pension included?
- Are all accounts in it, including deposits, investments and crypto?
- Are there recent transactions in an own business that are worth knowing about?
- When does the division take effect, and what does that mean for tax?
- Are you giving up pension, home equity or alimony? Then it is wise to know what the law would give you without an agreement; departing from it is hard to undo later.

TERMS, METHOD AND SOURCES

How we chose, read and limited the rulings.

19597 published rulings read (2000-10-11 to 2026-10-13); 14369 hold usable values. Per dispute point; partner support from 2020. Counts of individual decisions with n; no model, no averages.

Made on 2026-11-10 with software version 8c5d2e3 on data version 632f94f9e94193dd. The report is built by code from the rulings; no language model writes or changes it. Before delivery a person reads the report and the rulings it cites, and confirms that with the delivery.

Sample per dispute point

QUESTION	N
1. Where will the children mainly live?	5442
2. What happens to the house?	149
3. What counts when child support is set?	3350
4. Partner support: what do courts take into account?	1267

Similarity is the weighted sum of how close each component is, divided by the total weight; a component the decision lacks counts as zero. Coverage is the share of the weight that could be compared. A decision is comparable at a similarity of 0.55 and a coverage of 0.5 or more.

Glossary (Dutch legal terms)

Vovo	Voorlopige voorziening: a temporary court order that applies while the procedure runs. It can differ from the final decision.
Bodemprocedure	The main proceedings in which the court decides the dispute definitively, subject to appeal.
Hoofdverblijf	The home where a child mainly lives.
Zorgregeling	The arrangement for how care and contact time is shared between the parents.
Dwangsom	A penalty payment set by the court that becomes due if an order is not complied with.
Verdiencapaciteit	The income a person could reasonably earn, which a court may use instead of actual income.
Zorgkorting	A deduction in the child support calculation that reflects the care the paying parent provides.

LIMITS OF THIS SAMPLE

- Published decisions are a small, non-random part of all cases. Settled cases and cases that were never published are invisible.
- Every count states how many rulings it rests on.
- Some decisions are interim (voorlopige voorziening); their outcomes can differ from final decisions.
- The law and its application change over time; partner support is only compared from 2020 onwards.
- Only the rulings we read in full were examined for reasons and evidence; for the others we show counts, values and verbatim quotes.

WHAT THIS REPORT DOES NOT DO

- Source: only judgments published by the Rechtspraak (the Dutch judiciary), up to this report's reference date (2026-11-10).
- Period: the judgments read run from 2000-10-11 to 2026-10-13.
- Selection: judgments on the dispute points you named in the interview, chosen by the features of your situation; what you did not name was not researched.
- Unpublished judgments are missing. Published judgments are a small, non-random share of all cases.
- Your own documents (covenant, decision, financial papers) were not assessed, and the other party's position was not heard.
- The report does not predict how your case will end.

ABOUT THIS EDITION

This example is built for a fictional client. Counts, values and quotes come from the rulings we have read. Text marked “template text” is generic and not derived from decisions. Reasons, evidence treatment and conduct responses are marked “not yet coded”. Verbatim quotes from the decisions stay in the original Dutch.

DISCLAIMER AND LIABILITY

Using the report, with clear boundaries.

1. Research and guidance, not legal advice	This report is research on published decisions with practical guidance based on them. It is not legal advice, and no lawyer-client relationship arises. It does not replace a lawyer, mediator or other professional. [Wording to be approved by counsel.]
2. No prediction or guarantee	The scales are our count of the comparable rulings found, set against what you asked for. They predict nothing, and outcomes in other cases do not guarantee the outcome in yours.
3. Accuracy and currency	Rulings can be identified by their ECLI number. The law may have changed since a ruling was published; ask your lawyer to check for legal changes since then. [Wording to be approved by counsel.]
4. Dependence on supplied facts	Incomplete or incorrect inputs can change the analysis.
5. Liability	[Provider's approved limitation-of-liability language to be inserted.]
6. Intended use	The report is meant for the person it was prepared for. [Redistribution terms to be approved by counsel.]
7. Privacy	Your name is printed only on this report and is not used for matching. Names of children and of the other party are not collected. [Approved data handling and deletion policy to be inserted. In this phase-0 fixture nothing is stored.]
8. Governing law	[Approved legal / contractual wording to be inserted.]

QA CHECK

No names of the other party or the children · every conclusion rests on counted rulings, cited by ECLI, with the sample size stated · every advice item linked to a finding · no claim of how sure an outcome is, only counts. The report prints no free text from the intake.

BEFORE YOU SIGN ANYTHING OR START PROCEEDINGS

- It is wise not to sign a covenant, parenting plan or division, or start proceedings, based on this report alone.
- It is wise to have a lawyer or mediator read along before you agree; departing from what the law gives is hard to undo later.
- Mandatory legal representation: a petition for divorce or for ending a registered partnership is filed through a lawyer. A lawyer is also required on appeal.

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

This report contains information from a closed family case. It is not an expert report. It is meant to be discussed with your own lawyer. It is wise not to share it with the other party, and not to use it in a joint mediation without an agreement on how documents may be used there. It is not meant to be posted online.
